All our nut trees, with the exception of Hickory and Chestnut are grafted on Native Black Walnut Stock which assures you of hardy trees that will adjust themselves to almost any soil condition. In order that these trees will have proper roots to promote rapid growth and early productivity, we scientifically develop a strong and vigorous root system. A small tree with heavy roots will attain greater height in a shorter time, than a newly-set-out tree which is taller but lacks sufficient root fibers.

PLANTING GUIDE

When trees are received unpack them with care. Immediately heel them in the ground. As soon as possible dig the holes where the trees are to be planted. This hole must be large enough to spread all the roots out. Plant nut trees as deep as they were in the nursery. A dirt line will indicate where on the bark. If they are set a little deeper no harm is done, but do not set them shallow. The best fertilizer is well rotted cow manure mixed with one good handful of agricultural lime for each tree. Mix this into the soil you use for planting the tree. Put a layer of this mixture into the hole; spread the roots on this and continue to fill the hole until top level is reached. Firm soil around tree and finish up by building a saucer-shaped ring around tree for water.

Nut trees need water and good air circulation. Choose a high elevation if possible and do not fear cold weather. It will not harm them. Any place you consider proper for a peach orchard will be ideal for nut trees also.

Spring is the favorite planting time.
